Kerry Jane Williams

Hockey

Between the ages of 2-6 Kerry was a terror toddler, driving her family and school teachers mad as she was unable to channel her energies and apply herself.

After being introduced to sports which require high levels of discipline and competition, Kerry was able to turn her naughty behaviour into something positive. Sporting achievements gave Kerry the skills and confidence to succeed in education, moving her towards the top end of the class.

In 2006 having only had 4 senior caps, Kerry went to her first major tournament the Women's Hockey World Cup in Madrid. From there on she became a key part of the England Women's team, winning bronze in the 2007 Euronations Tournament in Manchester, which secured Olympic Qualification for Beijing 2008. Now a member of the GB squad Kerry sets her sights on her childhood dreams of playing in the Olympics at either Beijing 2008 or London 2012...perhaps both!
